

Arizona Game and Fish Department Living With Urban Wildlife Classes in Tucson

Rattlers got you rattled? Wondering how to attract birds to your yard without attracting snakes and bobcats?

Attend a free class about how to coexist with wildlife in an urban setting. You will see photographs of common urban wildlife and learn about their behavior, get tips on how to discourage wild animals you don't want on your property, and learn gardening and landscaping techniques to attract desired wildlife and discourage unwanted visitors. Plenty of free handouts will be available, perfect for the desert newcomer or long-time resident. The presentation is a joint effort of the Arizona Game and Fish Department, Tucson Botanical Gardens and Tucson Audubon Society. Volunteer presenters have more than seven hours of specialized training. The class is approximately 1-1/2 hours, including time for questions.
